Fay & Humphrey's Muse.

Though not yet the smoke of battle
Clears along our Southern sky;
Though the cannon thunders low earth,
And the lightning flash on high;
And though still our dauntless legions
March to conquer or die;

Yet for those who stay behind them,
(Alas! when their turn shall come,
To expose, wherever they find them,
All the fo' of Freedom's home)
Every common need of no word,
Must be ever be supplied.

CLOTHING must be had to shelter
From dust, heat or hot sunbeams;
Care to please you in that line,
With their olden style maintained,
Fay & Humphrey still are waiting,
To supply a needful want.

Men and boys, whatever your nation,
Size, complexion, form, may be,
Come from every rank and station,
Just YOUR STYLE you must select;
Just YOUR STYLE you must select;
Just YOUR STYLE you must select.

Ready-made, shall put on your eyes—
You that were just now despairing,
Come to the "Fay & Humphrey's" and buy,
Of all that you need in that line.

Of all that you need in that line,
Every style is represented,
Look and let your hearts rejoice,
You are pleased? This way—allow me—
Walk up, please, and see what I can do,
I will make you a fine suit,
That will make you a fine suit,
That will make you a fine suit.

Take a moment in departing—
Downward please, with your hand—
Patience! but that is a station—
Just select an outfit you
In two or three hours to mention,
Ranged along the morning shelves;
Let them answer for themselves;
Let them answer for themselves;
Let them answer for themselves;

A Proclamation by the President.

Washington, May 8.—Whereas, the Congress of the United States, at its last session, enacted a law, entitled an act for enrolling and calling out the national forces, and for other purposes which was approved on the third day of March last, and

Whereas it is recited in said act that there now exists in the United States an insurrection and rebellion against the authority thereof, and it is under the constitution of the United States the duty of the government to suppress insurrection and rebellion, to guarantee to each state a republican form of government, and to preserve the public tranquility, and

Whereas, for these high purposes a military force is indispensable, to raise and support which all persons ought willingly to contribute; and

Whereas, no service can be more praiseworthy and honorable than that which is rendered for the maintenance of the constitution and the Union, and the consequent preservation of free government, and

Whereas, the reasons for the said statute, which was enacted by the said Congress, that all able bodied male citizens of the United States and persons of foreign birth, who shall have declared, on oath, their intention to become citizens under and in pursuance of the laws thereof, between the ages of 21 and 45 years, with certain exceptions not necessary to be herein mentioned, and declared to constitute the national forces, and shall be liable to perform military duty in the service of the United States, when called out by the President for that purpose; and

Whereas it is claimed in behalf of persons of foreign birth within the ages specified in said act, who have heretofore declared on oath their intention to become citizens under and in pursuance of the laws of the United States, and who have not exercised the right of suffrage or any other political franchise under the laws of the United States, or of any of the States thereof, are not absolutely concluded by their aforesaid declaration of intention for renouncing their purpose to become citizens, and that on the contrary such persons, under treaties or the law of nations, retain a right to renounce that purpose and to forego the privilege of citizenship and residence within the United States, under the obligations imposed

Now, therefore, to avoid all misapprehensions concerning the liability of persons connected to perform the services required by such enactment, and to give it full effect, I do hereby order and I proclaim, that no plea of alienage will be received or allowed to exempt from the obligations imposed by the aforesaid act of Congress. Any person of foreign birth, who shall have declared on oath his intention to become a citizen of the U. S. under the laws thereof, and who shall be found within the United States at any time during the continuance of the present insurrection or rebellion, at or after the expiration of the period of sixty-five days from the date of this proclamation, shall have such plea of alienage allowed in favor of such persons who have so aforesaid declared his intentions to become citizens of the United States and who shall have at any time the right of suffrage or any other political franchise within the United States, under the laws of any of the several States.

(Signed) ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Romance in Real Life.

Some years since, an Irish emigrant, of eccentric habits, whose estates had been very much encumbered by the impudence of his parents, died somewhat suddenly in the prime of his life. For a long time previously he had resided, under an assumed name, upon the continent, occasionally visiting England, but leaving the management of his affairs in the hands of an old confidential friend and legal adviser of his fathers, who filled the important and lucrative post of one of the Crown Solicitors for Ireland, and who, during the lifetime of the old earl, had made advances to a very large amount upon the security of certain unencumbered property of his in the county of Cork. These estates were, like many others in the sister kingdom at the commencement of this century, in a very improvident condition; but under skillful management of the Crown Solicitor, were generally increasing in value, when the untimely death of the peer occurred. His lordship had no immediate relations. With a rich and aged lady, had been estranged from him by his irregular habits of life. Under these circumstances, it was not surprising that he bequeathed the remains of his shattered fortune, with the exception of a few legacies, to the old friend and adviser of his father and himself. This gentleman, who, by the death of his brother, soon after succeeded to the baronage, entered into quiet possession of this, and thenceforth devoted the chief part of a large professional income to their improvement. He formed roads and fences, he constructed bridges, he erected handsome farms and commodious cottages, in place of the squalid huts in which the tenantry of the former noble proprietors had vegetated in old times. He was respected and beloved by the poor, whom he employed and fed his name was mentioned in the House of Commons; and when he died, some five or six years ago, his remains were followed to the grave by almost the whole of the Irish bench and bar. To his son and daughter descended those estates upon which he had expended so much, and of which he had enjoyed the unchallenged ownership. Twenty years after the death of the late earl, a dispute as to the validity of the bequest would have been impossible, but a few months before the expiration of that time, when the old baronet and most of those who were best acquainted with the circumstances are beyond the reach of all earthly inquiry, a bill has been filed by the present peer, now become the next kin, against the son and daughter of the deceased for the restitution of the improved and valuable property on the ground of misrepresentation and misapprehension. Should it be decided that the accusations are true, the decision, which will deprive a well known and respectable family of extensive estates, which they have now for twenty years considered as unquestionably and honorably their own, will give another instance of the precarious tenure of wealth and opulence.

Hydrophobia.

After burying the eggs in the soil, there to be matured by the sun, the female visits, from time to time, the place in which they are secreted, and just as the period of hatching is completed, exhibits her eagerness for her offspring in the anxiety with which she comes and goes, walks around the nest, and scratches the fractured shell, and by signs which resemble the bark of a dog, excites the half-estricted young to struggle forth into life. When she has beheld, with this sort of joy, fear and anxiety the last of her offspring quite its broken enclosure, she leads them forth into the pearly pools away from the river, and among the thick underwood to avoid the predatory visit of the father, whose spiteful delights in nothing more than the flavor of his own young, which he eats remorselessly on every opportunity. In this season of care and watchfulness, over them, she is tedious, during and more so, when they turn and by whining and grunting shows a peculiar solicitude to keep them in such pools, only as much too shallow for the restore of the full grown reptile.

Return to Common Sense.

The New York Times, after months of idle and wholesale denunciations of the democratic party as being disloyal, makes the following admission:

We have no doubt that the great body of the democratic party are for preserving the Union and for crushing the rebellion which alone threatens its existence. We do not doubt they look upon a vigorous prosecution of the war as the only means by which that result can be brought about. And, in spite of all efforts that may be made to drive or seduce the Democratic party from that position, we believe it will hold it with firmness and fidelity, and will insist upon the adoption of that policy by this administration and any other that may succeed it. We are well aware that the Democratic party does not on horse very many of the acts of the administration. We have no right to ask such endorsement at its hands. Upon any of the details of administration, upon any of the measures which the President and Congress see fit to adopt that party has a right to its own opinions. It may with propriety properly protest against the proclamation of emancipation the policy of arbitrary arrests, the edicts of negroes, and any other measure of the administration.

A Mo-cow Market.

The winter markets of Moscow and St. Petersburg present some of the most ludicrous specimens of the startling humor in which the Russians delight. Here you find frozen oxen, calves, sheep, rabbits, geese, ducks, and all manner of animals and birds, once animate with life, now stiff and stark in death. The oxen stand staring at you with their fixed eyes and goat carcasses are jumping or frisking in skinless innocence; the sheep lay at you with open mouths, or casting sheep's eyes at the by-standers, the rabbits, having traveled hundreds of miles, are jumping, running, or turning summersaults in frozen tabernacles to keep themselves warm, and so on with every variety of flesh, fowl, and even fish. The butchers cut short these expressive practical witisms by means of saws, as one might say a block of wood, and the sawdust which is really frozen flesh and blood in a powdered state, is gathered up in buckets and carried away by the children and ragmuffs to be made into soup.

Why don't you wear your ring, my dear? said a father in a bull-room to his daughter. "Because, papa, it hurts me when any one squeezes my hand."

"What business have you to have your hand squeezed?" "Certainly none; but still, you know, papa, one would like to keep it in respectable order."

Cross Reasons.—When you have plenty of leisure, says a contemporary, take up a newspaper and read cross-ways, and see what lots of fun you will have. Hydrophobia Cured.—A cure of hydrophobia, in its worst stage, has been effected by Dr. Louis Bauer, the health officer of Brooklyn. A citizen of that suburb was bitten in the hand about a week ago by a rabid dog, and shortly afterwards developed the usual symptoms of violent hydrophobia. Four eminent physicians did what they could for him, but without avail, and he had been given up to die a terrible death, when his case became known to Dr. Bauer. The latter on going to see the poor man, ordered him to be laid flat upon his stomach on the bed, and wrapped in ice and wet cloths on the back of his neck and along his spine. From the well known antipathy of hydrophobia victims to water, the patient at once went into violent spasms, exhibiting every sign of enduring terrible tortures. He was kept tight down, however, and the water was gradually subsided, the pulse and breathing became regular, and when the strange applications were removed, the patient was virtually a well man. This remarkable cure has created quite an excitement in the medical profession, and you will probably hear more about it.—N. Y. Cor. Polla Press.

"Don't you think, Sheriff?" An Amos Sawyer.—It seems that near Danville, in New York State, there resides a wealthy farmer who has three daughters, and who was so anxious for their welfare until recently, that he held their association with young men, and gave a cold shoulder to any adventurous gallant who attempted to hear him in his castle. But the girls were not to be cheated out of their "woman's rights" in this way, so they adopted the following plan of receiving company.—After the "stern parent" had retired to his virtuous bed, the daughters, determined to have their own way, the eldest would seize one end, and the fair ladies would hold them up to the tower. Now it happened that the sheet was hung out to early one night, and the old gentleman chanced to spy it as he returned home from a visit to a neighbor's house. Surprised that such an article should be hanging there—but not imagining its real purpose—he seized the lower end of it and attempted to pull it down. The girls above, supposing that one of their admirers was ready for an ascent to bliss, at once commenced to pull up the sheet, and were pulling away with a will, when a grey head appeared above the window sill. The fair ones recognized it at once, and with an "O Lord!" it was down the sheet! down went the old gentleman sheet and all. When the "parent" picked himself up, he found that one of his shoulders was dislocated and swore like a trooper. But this fall in life taught him a lesson, and his daughters were no longer obliged to keep a sheet anchored to the windward of their hopes to matrimony. One of them is already married, and the dislocated father expects to hail a second son-in-law soon.

At the Sabbath School soiree, held in Phoenix Hall Edinburgh, one of the speakers, who was remarkably successful in eliciting answers from the little people before him, put, among others, the question, "When a boy begins to smoke, what comes next?" To this interrogation an innocent little fellow at once made answer:—"Chawin."

A reply that seemed so appropriate to the whole juvenile congregation, that they took up the word in chorus, and made the hall re-echo "Chawin."

Father Waldo, of Syracuse, now in his 101st year, is the oldest remaining graduate of Yale College, having left that institution one year before Joshua Dewey, of Brooklyn, who graduated in 1787.

At a "wake" in Philadelphia, on the body of Mrs. Weingart, on the 25th ult., candles were left burning near the bed, the clothes and furniture took fire, and the corpse was burned to a crisp.

An adroit system of robbery has been detected in Paris: the swindlers would buy old books by the pound as if for trunk-makers and pastry-cooks, and then they would look in the directory for the names of persons most likely to be defrauded with ease, and attire themselves in the costume of booksellers' servants, and carry one of their books to the address selected, and ask of the servant or wife, two, three, or five dollars for the miserable trash which was not worth a sou. They made an excellent business of it until the police detected them.

The city of Chatham, Canada, has always been noted as the center of attraction among the colored population of that province. During the past week a jury was called in the courts of the city, among whom was a colored man, who was called to the witness stand, and testified to the fact that he recognized no distinction on account of color, and accordingly fined the white man five dollars each for contempt of court. Four of them paid the fine, but the fifth, unable to raise the money, was sent to prison, but was subsequently released.

The subject of the toast is said to have been offered at a printer's festival:—"The editor and the lawyer." The devil is satisfied with the copy of the former, but requires the original of the latter.

"Going, going, going," cried out an auctioneer. "Where are you going?" asked a passer-by. "Well," replied the knight of the hammer, "I'm going up to the Zoological Gardens to tell the managers that one of their baboons is loose."

A cockney tourist met a Scottish lassie going barefoot toward Glasgow. "Lassie," said he, "I should like to know if all of the people in these parts go barefoot?" "Part on 'em, do, and part on 'em mind their own business," was the rather sullen reply.
